"Landscapes of Despair: From Deinstitutionalization to Homelessness is a book by M. J. Dear and Jennifer R. Wolch that examines the emergence of urban ghettos in which the socially dependent—such as the mentally and physically disabled, ex-offenders, and addicts—are left homeless. The authors explore how this phenomenon emerged as a result of deinstitutionalization policies that led to the closure of mental hospitals and the decline of community-based care. This has led to the creation of new neighborhoods that are characterized by high levels of poverty, unemployment, and crime."
