He was an unhappy young man, but by the age of 30 he had become a hero of some note. By the mid-1960s, he had become a self-sufficient farmer and was earning a living from his farm. He was also involved in politics and was a member of the Sinn Fein revolutionary organization. In 1969, he was arrested for his involvement in the Irish Republican Army and spent time in prison. After his release, he continued to work on his farm and to participate in political activities. However, he remained out of the public eye and did not become involved in any high-profile events. He was known to be a quiet and private person, and he maintained a low profile throughout his life. He died in 1990 of natural causes.
